Dear Editor,

As a corresponding author, I declare that the paper “The BRICS and the BEPS project: an overview from a Brazilian Perspective” submitted for publication in the European and Asian Law Review is my original research work. It does not infringe any personal or property rights of another. The work does not contain anything libelous or otherwise illegal.

I confess that the work contains no material from other works protected by copyright that have been used without the written consent of the copyright owner, or that I can provide copies of all such required written consents to journal upon request.

I have properly cited the works of others in the text as well as in the reference list. I further declare that the manuscript submitted for publication has not been previously published and is not currently under review elsewhere.

The novelty of my work lies in the endeavour to apply multimodality to the teaching of creative writing. While other works may focus on the aesthetic, literary, or discourse aspects of creative writing, my work ventures into the implementation of multimodality, which itself is a new and developing area. Despite the preliminary nature of my developmental research, it presents a few findings that will be worthy of consideration by educators who are keen on applying this new approach. The connection between various semiotic resources in a piece of creative writing and its concomitant changes in its evaluation are two key outcomes in my paper that will inspire other scholars to conduct further research and exploration into the area.

I have chosen the European and Asian Law Review to be my venue for publication because the content of my paper is aligned with the scope of the journal, i.e. dissemination of innovative models of teaching and progressive learning technology.

I hereby warrant that I am submitting my original work, that I have the rights in the work, that I am submitting the work for first publication in the Journal and that it is not being considered for publication elsewhere and has not already been published elsewhere, and that I have obtained and can supply all necessary permissions for the reproduction of any copyright works not owned by me.

Sincerely Yours,
Agreed & Accepted by

Luis Eduardo Schoueri
